Finally, 10 categories of Leadership Awards recognize individuals from the end user community who are driving market progress.

Profiles of the judging panel can be viewed as part of the SC Awards coverage. Entries for the Leadership Awards were judged by the SC Media editorial team.

The high level of attention around this year's SC Awards reflects the extraordinary demands the events of the past year have placed on both organizations and vendors. In a letter to the community, SC Media Editor in Chief Jill Aitoro emphasized the battery of challenges they faced — from the global pandemic that drove employees home en masse; supply chain attacks that left government agencies and businesses of all sizes reeling; cybercriminals and enemy nation states that banked on security gaps — and much more.

"The 2021 SC Awards saw vendors and security practitioners delivering powerful strategies and solutions in response to unprecedented challenges," said Aitoro. "This year's honorees stood out for their resiliency, as well as their ability and willingness to collaborate with peers and partners for the sake of the cybersecurity at large."

SC Media's coverage includes profiles of winners and finalists across categories, as well a series of Winners Circle roundtables: candid on camera conversations between the SC Media editorial team and SC Award recipients about the evolving threat landscape, emerging technologies, vendor and customer partnership, and the role of cybersecurity in business growth plans. Winners Circle discussions feature prominent C-level executives and will be released throughout SC Awards Week.
